Are not Divine laws written on the human heart and put in mans inward parts just as sacred and binding as laws written in a book or on tables of stone? I so assume, and further that those laws are as profitable for doctrine and instruction in righteousness as any written in the Book of Books, which truths I reverance and adore. Our bodies nevertheless are the highest, grandest, chief excellence, the crowning glory of all the Creator s creations, and His inspiration found in that volume are new every morning and fresh every evening. The poet is on record as saying. The chief study of man should be man. If by that affirmation he meant that man should be studied as a volume of Divine revelations, I respond. Amen! I take the position that we should reverance the harp of a thousand strings, as David termed it, and regard it as sacred, equally with the Bible. Evidently, Professor Oliver Wendall Holmes, the poet, scholar, philanthropist, philosopher, wit, etc., so regarded it. Reverently and adoringly he wrote: Not in the starry heavens alone, Where God hath built His blazing throne, Nor yet alone in earth below, With belted seas that come and go, And endless isles of sunlit green Is all the Creator s glory seen. Look in upon...
