Excerpt: . to be interpreted as a teaching principle. Of course we must ntilise to the full the authority of the Bible. We shall not fail to take advantage of the feelings of obedience, reverence, and affection which attach themselves to Biblical characters, and give to the morals they convey a living force such as belongs to no profane story. At the same time we shall bring the morality which the Bible teaches into prominence rather than the authority of its prescriptions. As the late Headmaster of Harrow says, in an essay in which much stress is laid on the necessity of giving boys an insight into the facts of the Bible and their authority, Boys difficulties and needs are chiefly moral. 1 10. Adaptation of Truth considered Generally. We may now express Plato s principle of method in the moral and religious education of...
