Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Dream of Gerontius: 1865 There are several writings of men which pass, for their subject, beyond the life of man on earth. There is the inspired book of the Revelation itself. It is the praise of God, and the judgment of men. In Milton's poem of heaven and hell, man is not seen beyond this world. In Dante's he is everywhere, throughout Inferno, Purgatorio, Paradiso, in relation to all his life and works here below. In Newman's there is nothing of the world but as it has been used for the saving of the soul of the individual, who is present in every line - the soul before its Creator and its Judge. The end of the second Faust may be out of count here, as a sort of symbol merely. The Apocalypse seemed to Milton the majestic image of a high and stately tragedy - a series of vision pictures - shutting up and intermingling her solemn scenes and acts with a seven-fold chorus of hallelujahs and harping symphonies. Its words bear our minds, to where, thinking of all such things, we would be: - I was in the spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice as of a trumpet. And I saw. one like to the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the feet, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. And his head and his hairs were white, as white as wool, and as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire. And his feet unto fine brass, as in a burning furnace. And his...
