My lord invites me, and I starve On water mixd with wine; Formerly master of the Trinity School in Newcastle-uponTyne; and the early and able preceptor of Lord Eldon and Lord Stowell. He died in October 1802. Ed, But, at The Grapes, I get it neat, And never fail to shine. To every man his proper gift Dame Nature gives complete: My humour is--before I write, I always love to eat; 20 For, when Im scanty of good cheer, Im but a boy at best: So hunger, thirst, and Tyburn-tree I equally detest. Give me good wine, my verses are As good as man can make em; But when Ive none, or drink it small, Youll say, The devil take em! For how can any thing thats good Come from an empty vessel 30 But Ill out-sing even Ovids self Let me but wet my whistle. With belly full, and heart at ease, And all the man at home, I grow prophetic, and can talk Of wondrous things to come. When, on my brains high citadel, Strong Bacchus sits in state, Then Phoebus joins the jolly god, And all I say is great II. A BALLAD OF KING RICHARD THE FIRST. Composed A. D. 1193, during his long and unjust detention in the castle of Losemsten, by the emperor Henry VI, on returning from the Holy Land. Printed (with valuable annotations) by Sinner (Catalogus bib.
