A very helpful provision which aims to obviate trouble in the home, is included in the laws of four of the states, viz: the signature or acknowledgment of the assignment by both the husband and the wife. Only three of the states definitely regulate the charges which may be collected on a salary loan. Several of them legalize charges for investigating security offered, but since this applies only to those laws which include mortgage loans and the charges are intended primarily for investigation of the property upon which the mortgage is given, they are not included in this table. Four of the states require that the assignment contain certain definite information. Colorado provides that the amount of salary assigned must be stated. Connecticut requires the rate of interest...
